Ancient Near East

3400:307 Dept of History

This course offers a detailed look at the earliest civilizations of the Near East using archaeological and historical evidence. We will start at the end of the Upper Paleolithic and examine the transition from mobile hunting and gathering to settled village life relying on agriculture. We will then turn to the world's first cities and end the course with a discussion of the early states and empires which form the foundation of our own modern Western society.
